Formation Of The Weimar Republic
Days, award-winning historian Peter Fritzsche offers a probing account of the pivotal moments when the majority of the German people abandoned the Weimar Republic in the 1920s and embraced the National Socialists. Hitler's strategy was to convince a large number of Germans that the nation’s decline had been caused by the excessive demands of an industrialized society, the ideologies of modernism, and the stresses of the First World War. Hitler’s aim was to form an enemy to blame and an ‘advance guard’ to assert leadership. The book explores the nature of the new society the National Socialists promised, and why it was so appealing to so many Germans. It questions the extent to which the triumph of Nazism was historically predetermined or the product of human miscalculation and intent. The book challenges the traditional narrative of a “victor’s account” rather than an examination of what the National Socialists actually achieved. Throughout, Fritzsche’s sympathy for the ordinary Germans who supported the National Socialists and the appeal of the new era they promised is evident. He asks whether there were any redeeming features of the Third Reich for the nation that Hitler destroyed. He questions how united the Weimar Republic in 1919. The book also includes an assessment of Bismarck as a leader and questions how united Germany was in 1919. Forming and Reforming the New Woman in Weimar Germany-Lynne-Marie Hoskins Frame 1997
